fessed Robbing About
17 Places Recently

Four are under arrest charged with stealing an estimated 1400 chickens and a man is being held on the charge of purchasing the stolen fowls. The arrests were brought about by State Police from Doylestown, Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo and Constable Earl Blair, Doylestown.

The officers in two automobiles late Friday night began a patrol of the highways in the upper end of Bucks County. State Policeman Harry Christ and Detective Russo grouped in one car halted a machine at Dublin Pike and Bedminster Road in Bedminster Township at 1 a. m. Saturday. Those in the car tried to get away but were stopped and in the machine were found empty bags.

According to the officers they placed under arrest Frank Wilcox, 15; Sevelon Wilcox, 17; Richard Skees and Willard Keller, Quakertown R. F. D. The four were given a hearing before Justice Hobensack in Doylestown and held in $3,000 bail for court.

According to the officers the men admitted they have robbed about 17 different places and taken in all about 1400 chickens.

Alois Moos, Quakertown, has been implicated and is alleged to have been the one who bought the stolen fowls. He was held in $10,000 bail for court.

Long prison sentences await all five, if only the minimum sentence is imposed on the men who have confessed to the officers.

In capturing the quintet that have been terrifying farmers of the upper-end section of Bucks county since last September, police say they have rounded up a gang that before investigations are complete, will be connected with at least seventy robberies.

Several of the members of the group are known members of a radical group that has been distributing literature in sections of the county.

Those who took part in the chicken thief patrol were Corporal Daniel Dean, of the State Police, Bucks County Detective Antonio Russo, Troopers Edwards, Greblunas and Christ, Chief of Police James J. Welsh, of Doylestown, and Constable Earl Blair, of Doylestown.

Trooper Harry Christ, who is now stationed at Doylestown, his former headquarters several years ago, and County Detective Russo were on patrol in Dublin, at the intersection of Dublin Pike and Bedminster Road about 1:15 Saturday morning, when they noticed a car parked along the side of the highway. The car was occupied by Richard Skees, the owner, and Willard W. Keller. The officers questioned both men, searched the car and found a number of bags.

About the same time another car was noticed on Bedminster Road, and this car contained Sevelon A. Wilcox.

EXPECT YARDLEY BRIDGE
TO BE STARTED NEXT YEARKeystone Automobile Club
States Legislation Likely To Pass at TrentonWILL SHARE THE COSTS

Officials of the Keystone Automobile Club yesterday expressed the belief that the long-delayed project of constructing a new bridge over the Delaware River at Yardley will get under way next year. The bridge will provide a crossing for the relocated Lincoln Highway, construction of which halted at Langhorne because of New Jersey's delay in providing for its share of bridge costs.

A bill now is in New Jersey Legislature, sponsored by Assemblyman Crawford Jamieson, providing a 25 per cent contribution by New Jersey to the total cost of bridge construction. This bill is similar to legislation already passed by Pennsylvania. The remainder of the expense will be borne by the Federal government.

Assemblyman Jamieson said negotiations with Pennsylvania will be resumed, and indicated the belief that funds would be made available for New Jersey's share not later than next year.

"As soon as the necessary New Jersey legislation is enacted," said J. Maxwell Smith, General Manager of the Club, "and there is no further danger of delay, Pennsylvania will be justified in resumption of work on the new Lincoln Highway, which now dead-ends at its intersection with Route 213."

A CANDIDATE REVEALS HIMSELF

(Reprinted from Chicago Tribune, May 9)

The interview with Gov. Landon, heard on the radio Thursday evening, disclosed a number of things about the man, his opinions, and the quality of his mind which could not have been discerned so readily from a formal address. The interview, to be sure, was not wholly informal in the sense that it was extemporized. Mr. Landon undoubtedly knew what questions would be put to him. He must have gone over the ground carefully in advance. The question and answer method did serve, however, to enable Mr. Landon to speak easily and informally, as man to man, rather than as speaker to a public meeting. The radio interview is a novelty in Presidential campaigning, but it is a natural development of the use of the radio for entertainment, and no doubt will be widely employed as time goes on.

Gov. Landon showed that he is no panacea peddler. He does not believe in cure-alls, and if he is nominated he will not seek election on a cure-all platform. He knows he lives in a changing world, but he does not believe that everything in America must be made over instantly. New conditions create new responsibilities for the Government, but they do not warrant the scrapping of the American Constitution.

The Governor sees abuses and is eager to correct them. He believes that monopoly is bad and here his belief has plainly been formed by his own experience as an independent oil producer. The remedy for monopoly, he believes, is not more monopoly, such as Mr. Roosevelt has encouraged through his NRA, his Guffey Bill, and his latest tax bill, but more competition. Not business as such but unfair business practices must be uprooted, in his belief. Gov. Landon mentioned casually that he had been reading Prof. Fetter's "The Masquerade of Monopoly." If Mr. Roosevelt had gone to the same book for guidance he would have avoided some of his most disastrous errors.

The Government has a role to play in speeding recovery, the Governor holds. It must prevent needless suffering, and it can do so without destroying the Government's credit and without using relief as a means of building up a gigantic political machine. Above all, the Government can restore opportunity to those who are willing to work by restoring confidence in its own intentions and stability. It can go far to re-establish the self-respect of the men and women who at present are condemned to forced labor in Harry Hopkins' legion of misery.

He said:

"I for one am dedicated to the proposition that henceforth no American citizen shall ever again be put in a position where he has to sell his vote for bread."

Gov. Landon's views on the Roosevelt Administration were particularly pointed. He finds merit in some of the ideas behind the legislation of the last three years, but he is convinced that the execution has been incompetent and blundering. Money has been wasted, time has been wasted by too much haste, there has been too much improvisation and too little painstaking thought. Much that has been attempted must be undone; much more must be revised, simplified, and made workable.

The interview went far to promote the Governor's candidacy. He disclosed himself as a man possessed of common sense. He seemed in the interview to be patient, thoughtful, prudent, with a mind ripened by experience in business and in public life. He thinks and talks like an honest man, aware of his own limitations, but aware, also, of his proved capacity for meeting situations as they arise.

LIGHTNING FIRES HOUSE
AT BRIDGEWATERResidence of Mrs. Josephine
Johnson Slightly Damaged
By Blaze on RoofSTURDY OAK IS A VICTIM

Lightning struck the residence of Mrs. Josephine Johnson, Bristol Pike, Bridgewater, last evening during the storm which broke over this section. The bolt hit the front part of the roof and fired the building. Firemen from Crocydon and Cornwells were summoned and made a quick run. They devoted their efforts to extinguishing the blaze which they did with but small damage to the dwelling.

A sturdy oak, a member of the "Ancient and Honorable Order of Penn Trees," fell a victim to lightning last Wednesday in the yard of the Neshaminy of Warwick Presbyterian Church, near Hartsville. These trees, each of which is at least 250 years old, were so honored in 1932 during the observance of the 250th anniversary of William Penn's arrival in America.

A shattered stump, rising only a few feet from the ground of the churchyard, is all that remains today of a magnificent old oak believed to have been over 400 years old.

A storm visited the section last Wednesday. Rain fell in torrents. Thunder shook the countryside and lightning flashed. One bolt struck the tree and splintered it.

Branches, leaves and parts of the trunk fell all around the gnarled old patriarch, leaving only the bleak stump. There was no fire.

It is said that when George Washington had his headquarters near Hartsville he often tied his horse under the Hartsville tree while attending church services.

The tree had a girth of 23 feet one foot above ground and a girth of 18 feet breast high.

In 1905, when tree surgery was first becoming known, this oak was already on the decline. It was in such a state of decay that there were not more than ten inches of sound wood on one side. Church members began the task of repairing it.

To fill the cavities to a height of eight feet required more than a ton of field stone and 4,000 pounds of cement and crushed stone. Repair work was also done on it in 1908 and so good was the job that up until its fall it gave promise of surviving at least another century.

On the concrete showing at the base of the tree was this inscription: "Rebuilt June 15, 1908. Spare this tree."

PARENTS' DAY OBSERVED
AT NAT'L FARM SCHOOLInspect the Hundreds of Acres of Farm Land and Also CampusSPEECHES DELIVERED

DOYLESTOWN, May 19—Parents' Day was observed at National Farm School, when mothers and fathers of students gathered to inspect the 1200 acres here which comprise the farm lands and campus, and listen to a program which included addresses by school leaders.

Dr. Cletus L. Goodling, dean of the school, informed that the outlook for agriculture is better now than ever before in the country's history. Dean Goodling stated "the average student has a chance of making a fair living in agriculture when he gets out of school. And the student who is better than average will make a lot of money in agriculture."

"What is needed more than anything else in American agriculture today," he continued, "is to turn out farm graduates who have some business training as well as practical and scientific farm training."

Herbert D. Allman, Philadelphia, president of the school, predicted the time is coming when the farmer will not only raise raw materials for industry, but will do the initial processing on his farm.

"He will stand," he said, "on both his feet—one foot on the soil for his livelihood and the other foot in industry for the cash he needs. He will have double security. Agriculture suffers from a lack of market for its products; industry suffers from a lack of employment for its surplus men. Bringing them together heals the ailment of both."

Other speakers were Miss Margaret Maguire, principal of the McCall Vocational School in Philadelphia; Max Semel, of New York, president of the Alumni Association of the school; Samuel B. Samuels, athletic director of the school and assistant to the dean, and Dr. Allen H. Moore, school physician. Charles Kahn, Philadelphia, a member of the board of trustees, presided.

To Consider Flood Control Act

Washington, May 19—Ready to authorize the gigantic program for flood ravages in all sections of the nation, the Senate today scheduled consideration of the $315,000,000 Wilson-Copeland flood control act.

The bill was expected to pass the Senate without serious opposition.

Under terms of the bill, benefiting communities would have to reimburse the Federal government against all deals for the purchase of land to be used for reservoirs, and for the relocation of highways and railroads in such areas.

Stiff opposition against this developed in sections where the protecting work was to be constructed in one locality for the protection of others. One was the construction of a reservoir in New Hampshire and Vermont for the protection of cities in Connecticut. Under the bill, the States of New Hampshire and Vermont would have to contribute to the cost of the protection work while Connecticut would get all the benefits.

DUTY WELL PERFORMED

The signaling to the engineer of an express train by Police Officer Daniel Ferry to stop, so as to prevent the train from being wrecked with the possible loss of life, early Sunday morning, was a duty which should not pass without recognition. The officer quickly saw the situation when he discovered that an automobile was on the west-bound track of the main line of the P. R. R., where it had been thoughtlessly left, by an excited motorist after an accident.

Ferry used good judgment and acted accordingly when he ran along the track in the path of an approaching express, waving his flashlight, back and forth, to attract the attention of the engineer. It was only a small light which the engineman saw moving back and forth as a signal for him to stop. The brakes were applied and the big powerful electric engine groaned as the pressure was applied against the big heavy steel wheels. The speed of the giant monster slackened, but it is difficult to halt within a short distance an engine being driven at 70 miles or more per hour. But the experienced hand of the giant's guide brought the engine to a halt just as it almost gently nosed the automobile off the track. The automobile was merely shoved aside as a parent brushes away an offspring after being pried with questions, too numerous to answer.

Just because Daniel Ferry is a police officer and it was in his line of duty, his action should not pass unnoticed. Let the public be as ready to commend him as it is to condemn officers of the law for some minor oversight or alleged neglect of duty.

THEY NEVER GIVE UP

One of the things which make federal officers much more feared by the underworld than state officers is the relentlessness with which they go after their man.

State authorities as a general rule are inclined to drop a case after a considerable time has elapsed without results being achieved. Other cases occur to demand attention, or a change in officials may be a factor.

The Federal Government, however, follows the policy of never giving up. Public interest and even the interest of higher officials may wane, but the men in the field have orders to "get their man." This they do with remarkable consistency.

The relentlessness of their search is illustrated at present in the capture of Alvin Karpis.

The work of Department of Justice agents has been greatly increased since the government undertook to assist the states in the war on kidnapers and other gangsters. This promises to be further added to through the enactment of bills now pending in Congress.

The Musings of A Native Son---

A Weekly Commentary on Things of Local Interest which will appear each Tuesday in this column.

A few days ago, I picked up a book bearing the title, "Early American Inns and Taverns." As I thumbed its pages, I thought, of course, I should find some reference to our local hostelry, the Delaware House, which in its early days was known as "The King George the Third."

Built in 1755, it soon acquired an enviable reputation as a public house. After the starting of the stage route between New York and Philadelphia, it was known as the best hotel along the route. During the prominence of the Bath Springs as a fashionable watering resort, the elite of foreign nations were its guests, as well as Ministers Plenipotentiary and consuls, Senators and Congressmen and high officials in the Continental Army, stayed at this fashionable hotel.

And yet as I turned the pages of this book, I found not a word about it. From the Red Lion Inn at Torresdale, the author jumps to the Robert Morris Inn at Morrisville, ignoring all reference to Bristol and its famous hotel. If this seeming oversight occurred only occasionally, I would think nothing of it, but its frequent occurrence indicates an ignorance of the historical richness of the third oldest town in Pennsylvania.

Some months ago, the officials in charge of the annual track and field meet, of the Bucks County public schools, decided that the girls should not participate in the athletic contests with the boys, but should have a sports day of their own. Bristol and some other schools protested strongly and at last Bristol served notice, that if the same program was followed next year, they would withdraw from the county meet.

The girl athletes of the Bristol High School and their coach Miss Pope, took no part in the county meet, but participated in a tri-school meet at Norristown on the same day and carried off the victory. In the standing broad jump, a Bristol girl broke the National scholastic record. Bristol Township also opposed the withdrawal of the girls and took no part in the county meet this year. Next year Bristol will probably stage a track meet of its own at home.

As I listened to the playing of the Legion Cadet Bugle Corps in the Youths' Week Parade, I noted a grace and harmony that I had never noticed before, and I marvelled at the change. The strains of "My Country 'Tis of Thee" and "Auld Lang Syne" were as smooth and harmonious as could be played by a brass band.

At a recent joint meeting of the Rotary and Exchange Clubs, the committee having charge of the Cadet Bugle Corps, asked permission to give a demonstration of the new method now employed in teaching the playing of the bugle, which method has been developed by their leader, Mr. Brodie.

After the regular business of the meeting was disposed of, the balance of the evening was turned over to the Corps. Mr. Brodie first explained the new method and then allowed the Corps to demonstrate. He said he had divided the members of the Corps into several groups, one of which played baritone bugles, another group played soprano bugles and still another played tenor bugles. Either group playing alone gave little evidence of harmony, but when all played together, the music blended into perfect harmony.

To demonstrate the possibilities contained in this new method, the Corps played selections from the opera of "Tannhauser." Mr. Brodie stated that the local Cadet Corps was the only Corps in the United States that was using this method, and that up to the present time, although many appeals had come from outside, they had refused to divulge the secret to anyone.

So this accounted for the marked improvement and superior playing of the Cadet Corps in the Youth Week parade.

Dr. Calvin Allhouse of Philadelphia, in a recent address delivered at a joint session of the Bristol Exchange Club and the Morrisville Rotary Club, said that of the 400,000 persons receiving relief in Philadelphia, many of them are unnaturalized citizens, made up of Russians, Poles and Rumanians, who are opposed to our form of government, and who are continually sowing the seed of discontent and fomenting distrust for American ideals. And yet through the rotten system of relief being directed from Washington and Harrisburg, the money collected for taxes, imposed on loyal American citizens, is being used to feed and sustain these undesirable, who are a menace to our country and its institutions, and who have no respect for our flag.

As we listen to such statements coming from one who speaks with a knowledge of their truthfulness, we cannot help but wonder how much longer our American form of government can be sustained, against the propagation of such ruinous policies as those which are practiced by both the governments at Harrisburg and Washington.

Mrs. Carrie Paulus, Slaton, spent the week-end with her daughter, Miss Irene Paulus, 421 Otter street.

Seeds for cultivating Dollars

AS YOU turn the pages of this newspaper, dozens of seeds are scattered over your mind. . . . That's a good-looking car. . . . I'd like to have that radio. . . . What a pretty dress. . . . I think I'll try a can of that soup. Some of these advertisements may not interest you at the moment. Others will fall on fertile ground, take root and bear fruit in some wise future purchase.

Speaking of seeds reminds us: Have you bought yours for the garden yet? It isn't too early to plant some of them now. How about the slip covers for the porch chairs? Then there's that new spring hat. And the special soap-sales for your spring cleaning. Look up these items in the advertisements before you buy.

Advertisements help you to weed out waste, both in your time and your money. They draw a straight line between your cash and the correct counter. Cultivate the habit of reading them regularly. They bring you a harvest of much usable information.

"BLIND" TO LOVE by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

SYNOPSIS

Mary Shannon had been pampered all her life. She would have gone on that way had not the sight of her father's worn collar awakened Mary to her selfishness with the result that she left college and obtained work in the San Francisco office of the A. A. Heeley Steamship Company. Mary is in love with the socially prominent James ("Jamie") Todd, Jr. Although he never said he loved her, he implied that some day they would marry. Mary's superior, Stephen Bennet, notices her that he is to be transferred to Seattle as manager of the home office. He wants Mary to go along as his secretary but she cannot bear the thought of leaving her family. That night, Aunt Willie stuns Mary with the news of "Jamie's" engagement to Nesta Grainger. Mary cannot believe that "Jamie" no longer loves her. Next day, Mary has to work late; she has a hard time convincing her mother that she will not be home to dinner.

CHAPTER VI

Families are wonderful . . . but oh, how hard they make things! It wouldn't be so bad about Jamie—that is, it wouldn't be so hard to take, if she wasn't conscious all the time of the family thinking and knowing about it. . . .

Life without Jamie. . . . She put her hands over tired eyes. Tried to think. . . . Plan. . . . And no thought came. Just ache. Pain.

Well, she'd be here all night, if she didn't get to work.

Five o'clock. The whistles blew. Feet hurried by the door. She could hear the elevator doors clanging open, shut.

Over the roof of the Dollar building she could look out to the bay, see the ferry she should be on, gliding smoothly into the blue.

The sky was blue, too, with great, fluffy white clouds, fluffy clouds like that the first day she ever met Jamie. When they lay on the warm yellow sand together, and he slipped his arm around her waist. . . .

The little pencilled curves and curls of her notebook flowed into meaningless chaos. A pulse over her right eye began to beat.

I must stop thinking about him. I'll never get this done.

Her fingers typed. "Rather than meet the stevedores' overtime on S. S. Ilo-Hoo—"

How—what? Could it be Hoogaat really? Lord, what a name for an innocent steamship. Better look it up. . . .

Looking it up took so long that the report wasn't finished when Bennet came for it at half past six.

"I'm sorry—I'm slow. . . ."

"You're tired. I shouldn't have asked you. It's just that I wanted to clean everything up tonight. I'm going tomorrow. I wish now that I'd called an extra girl."

She wished he had, too, but at least he'd noticed she looked tired. That was something. Nobody else had.

"I tell you, Miss Shannon, We'll stop now, and go out and have a little dinner somewhere, and come back and finish afterwards. You'll be more rested then. How about it?"

She didn't care if she ever ate again. In fact, she preferred not to. But to get away, for a little change. . . .

A little sparkle came to her dull eyes.

It would be rather fun at that, to go out with Bennet. Ma would worry. Ma was sure bosses lay in wait like goldfish for innocent young stenographers. Ma never would believe that the stenographers did as much lying in wait for the innocent bosses.

Any girl that wastes her time trying to land the boss is a fool. They aren't marrying their stenographers this season. You're just part of the office furniture to them. But if they want to pay for a good meal for you. . . .

"I think it's a brilliant idea," she said.

When Mary Shannon walked out of the Merchants Exchange building with Stephen Bennet she felt almost happy.

She felt little beside him. He was a tall man. She hadn't noticed, particularly, before.

He had a nice profile. Clear cut. Anyone who liked dark men would think he was quite grand. Personally, she didn't. There's something about a man with slick light hair, and sun-burnt skin. Oh Jamie. Jamie. . . . If it could only be you tonight! Even if it were just for tonight—just ONCE more—

"The car is across the street," Mr. Bennet said.

So they crossed the street and it turned out to be a blue car, though not the sort you'd look at twice. Not low-slung and nicklede, like Jamie's. Just a car.

He drove very well. Well, anyone drives well in traffic who's used to it.

He hadn't asked her where she wanted to go. Or maybe he was just going to take her to a bakery or cafeteria or something, where they could get to work more quickly.

"We can get good food here, and the service is fast," he said when he had parked the car in an alley and the word "Grill" flashed on and off in yellowish lights.

She had a moment's thrill, thinking it was going to be a speakeasy, but it was just a rather small French restaurant, with breadsticks in a glass case every table, and the napkins twisted into stars.

Bennet didn't pay any attention to the regular dinner, though it sounded all right. He went right ahead and ordered things, though he did say, "Is this going to be all right for you, Miss Shannon?"

It was fun. He was really quite nice looking, and when they got as far as the mussels bordelaise, that had to be fished out of the parsley-flecked liquid and coaxed out of their black shells that sprang open like pea pods, she almost forgot that she was boss of a stenographer.

He might have been just a friend. If it could have been Jamie.

When he sat, talking and laughing with her, and the waiter, with the black alpaca coat and the napkin over his arm, hovered around the table, she could almost forget her troubles.

They got rather confidential. It seemed funny. Because they'd never talked anything but business before.

It seemed that he wasn't altogether pleased about going north, though it was a promotion and Seattle was really his home. His mother had a house near one of the parks, he said. He and his mother and a widowed sister with two little girls all lived together.

"Then you're not married?"

"No!"

He looked so surprised, she laughed out loud.

"No! What made you think I was?"

"Oh, I don't know. Most men are."

This seemed to strike him funny and she smiled, too. No need to let him know she'd never given it a thought and the subject didn't even interest her now.

But under his sympathetic questioning she talked more than she had meant to. Her description of the shingled cottage and the enormous old palm trees where the sparrows nested wasn't exactly inaccurate, but it suggested the romantic poverty of worn tapestry on fine mahogany of the better movies rather than the actualities of a hole in the oilcloth on the kitchen table.

where they had all their meals, and the funny looking furniture bought from a mail order house 25 years ago.

So she couldn't let him take her home when it was all over, as he almost insisted, because it was so late.

After all, it didn't make any difference. He was going the next day and she wasn't interested in him anyway.

Of course the family was sitting up for her. They had the porch light on and lights in the front room and all over. You'd think there was a party going on.

Ma didn't fuss much, but she did want to know exactly what they'd had for dinner, and she had to go over the whole thing from soup to cheese, yawning so she could hardly talk.

"Identical dinner we used to get for 25 cents in all the French restaurants before the fire," Pa said. Ma wanted to know whether the chicken seemed to be fried in butter or olive oil, and Aunt Willie got started on the 30-cent special luncheon the Signe of Ye Olde Apple Blossom was now offering, with choice of 15 entrees and 20 desserts, and Ma had to stay and listen to the 20 desserts, but Mary's yawns saved her. Ma sent her to bed.

She thought she was tired enough to sleep. There was a pain like a red-hot iron at the back of her neck and her eyelids were heavy as lead.

But when she got the light out, and shut her eyes, she knew that she couldn't.

What could she do? What would anyone else do in her place? If it were for his happiness. . . . yes, she could give him up if she knew he had stopped loving her and did love the other girl. But how did she know that? A fellow like Jamie—putty in a designing girl's hands.

And his father, who had 4 cents of the first 5 he ever made and all but about a dollar and a half of the wealth of the San Joaquin valley—how did she know this marriage wasn't HIS idea?

She thought of the last time they were together. . . . his kisses, not the kisses a boy gives to a girl he's just out with. . . . but real kisses. Oh, there was no doubt of that. He meant them. And the things he said. . . . how did he tell her—"Gee, Mary, you're pretty!" Not in a flattering way, the way some boys might. But sort of wondering, "You've got the prettiest blue eyes in the world" and "You've even got pretty elbows and feet, Mar."

Ma! If anybody else had called her Mar she'd have hated it. But when he said it. . . .

Well, that's what happens when you really care for someone.

You can't give up. Not without a struggle.

The house seemed pretty quiet, so she risked lighting the light and got up to look for note paper and her fountain pen.

Her eyelids drooped again. The sparrows in the palm outside her open window chirped inquiringly. She pulled her kimono closer around her shoulders. It must be nearly morning. She'd written six long letters and torn them into tiny shreds. She'd send this short one:

"Dear Jamie:

"Long time since you've been over. Even if you are getting married, you must not forget your old friends, who wish you all the happiness, so if you are going to be in town soon I wish you would meet me in S. F. for lunch, if you could. I would like to congratulate you and talk over old times and wish you luck. As ever,

"MARY."

She was too tired now to know if it was just what she wanted to say or not. In the morning. . . .

NEWTOWN TIES BRISTOL FOR LEAGUE HONORS

MORRISVILLE, May 19 — Winnie Hoffmeister, brilliant Newtown High right-hander, entered the hall of fame when he pitched a 6-0 no-hit, no-run victory over Morrisville High in a seven-inning Lower Bucks County League game here yesterday.

Hoffmeister allowed but one base on balls and struck out eight Bulldog batters. His mound rival, big Jess Huggins, also fanned eight but was touched for nine hits.

Bill Nolan, star shortstop from Newtown, smacked a home run with a mate aboard in the seventh.

The triumph ties Newtown with Bristol for the lead in the Lower Bucks circuit. A playoff will be held shortly to decide the champion.

HEAVY TICKET DEMAND FOR ST. ANN'S FIGHTS

Advance sale of tickets for the opening show of the outdoor season at St. Ann's Boxing Arena indicate that the sport fans of Bristol and vicinity are responding heartily to help make a capacity house. According to finance manager Charles P. Alta, close to 250 tickets have already been reserved and there are but 75 reserve seats left.

General admission tickets will go on sale at seven o'clock on the night of the show which is Monday, May 25. There are 1000 bleacher seats to be sold. The boxing bouts are sponsored by the St. Ann's Athletic Association and sanctioned by the Middle Atlantic district of the Amateur Athletic Union.

Tomorrow afternoon the newly-purchased dome-light will be installed. This dome-light is the latest to be used in large arenas and will afford better lights to focus on the fighting platform. A sound-amplifying system also will be installed before the opening night.

Matchmaker Patsey Moffo is working on his all-star show which he has promised to the fans and is trying to get several encores. He has practically clinched the Vince Della-Tony Surello bout, while he is almost certain of giving Harry Davis a return match with Frank Donofrio. Davis entered the finals of the Camden tournament but was beaten in the last fight of the night on a questionable decision. Donofrio was crowned the champion.

TWO GAMES BOOKED IN TWILIGHT LOOP

Two games are scheduled in the Bristol Twilight League loop tonight. On Leedom's field, the Bath Road Men's Club will play the Caseys, while at Edgely, Walter Miller's Edgely Braves will cross bats with the Odd Fellows. Games are scheduled to begin at 6:40 o'clock sharp. Both of the tilts scheduled for last night were called off because of rain.

RECORD "GATE" FOR OLYMPICS IS EXPECTED

(Note: This is the first of a series on Germany's preparations for the Olympic games.)

By Pierre J. Huss
U. S. Staff Correspondent

BERLIN, May 19.—(INS)—The biggest "gate" since the revival of Olympic Games is forecast for the 1936 event in Berlin and for that reason the main stadium at the Reichs Sports Field is designed to hold 100,000 spectators sitting and standing.

The whole layout on the sports field, including the various stadiums, training fields and Olympic village, is spread out to generous proportions so that the overflow in one spot can always be taken care of by one of the other branches. Even at this early date, as a sample of what to expect, every seat for track and field events has been sold out, although it may be supposed that some of the tickets taken in blocs by various nations will be turned back by the time the games open on August 1.

Looking like a collection of Roman-Greek sports fields in one, the Forum-like stadium flanked by huge entrance pillars occupies the middle of the layout, and will seat 65,000 with standing room for another 35,000. It is rapidly nearing completion. Solidly built, it and the other structures will serve the new German army after the Olympics and thus provide the German military forces with the finest sporting facilities in Europe.

Alongside the main stadium are two training tracks, where athletes can have a work-out before stepping on the field inside. The dressing rooms and postal telegraph office under the seats are the last word in size and equipment.

Close to the main building is the swimming stadium, 150 feet long and 60 feet wide. There is a special diving pool and seats for 18,000. Daily training for swimmers is available in the near-by lake.

Basketballers will find themselves amply taken care of at the tennis stadium, where 10,000 can watch the fun at ease. Field hockey with stands for 20,000 will be played on the field a few steps away.

A dormitory for women, providing its occupants with every modern comfort, has been built within sight of the main stadium, not far from the equestrian and polo fields. The Olympic village itself, where some 4,500 athletes will be housed, is about four miles from the Reichs Sports Field. The houses, simply designed but solidly built, house from 16 to 20 beds although a few have as many as 24 beds. For the private use of athletes quartered in the village are also being constructed an athletic field, a swimming pool and several restaurants. There will also be a Community House for nightly entertainment.

The sports field is about five miles from the center of Berlin but easily accessible by subway, electric trains and buses or private cars, for which special parking arrangements will be made. Ticket scalpers and other kinds of racketeers will be summarily dealt with by the special police now being organized by the city of Berlin.

World's Mightiest Circus Coming Soon

With the most impressive and brilliant seven-ring-and-stage program in its history, the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Circus, which will exhibit in Philadelphia, the week beginning Monday afternoon, May 25, offers this season, as a sensational super-feature, a herd of African pigmy elephants, the first ever to set foot on this continent. These tiny tusked are not babies, but full-grown, middle-aged midget elephants, the rarest animals on the face of the earth. Accompanying them is a herd of miniature African ponies, the world's smallest beasts of burden. The pigmy elephants have proven the greatest attraction the Big Show has ever placed before the public, not even excepting its presentation in the past of the disc-lipped Ubangis, the giraffe-necked women from Burma, the sacred white elephant of Siam, Jumbo, Tom Thumb and Goliath, the sea elephant.

Among the scores of new features, to say nothing of the new importations from Europe and Asia, including the incredible Naitto troupe, the Royal Bokara troupe, the Imperial Viennese equestrian troupe, the great Frederico and a free running horse, pony and elephant liberty act of sixty members, is Col. Tim McCoy, the screen's most outstanding western star, at the head of his congress of rough riders of the world—Cowboys, cowgirls, vaqueros, Sioux and Blackfoot warriors and Australian bushrangers. Col. McCoy, plainsman, cavalry officer in the U. S. Army Reserve and friend of the Indian, is the idol of American boys and girls, and he will be seen in both the main performances and the wild west.

The Greatest Show on Earth heads into this territory on four long railroad trains of 100 cars, with 1600 people, seven herds of full-sized elephant actors, 1009 menagerie animals and 700 horses. Its tented city covers 14 acres of ground. There are 31 large tents, including the world's largest big top, seating 16,000 persons.

This is the peak season for youth and beauty among the 800 world famous arenic artists with the show. In the air, in the three rings, on the four stages and in the quarter-mile hippodrome track will be seen hundreds of pretty girls. In the 60-girl aerial ballet, the most beautiful mid-air display ever produced, there are beauties that evoke columns of newspaper comment wherever the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Combined Circus exhibits.

SUPERSTITIOUS BELIEFS

DURING THE MIDDLE AGES, IT WAS BELIEVED THAT A PERSON SUFFERING FROM SCROFULA COULD BE CURED INSTANTLY BY RUBBING THE AFFECTED PARTS WITH THE HAND OF A CRIMINAL WHO HAD BEEN EXECUTED.

DOLLS WERE ONCE THOUGHT TO HAVE LIFE, AND WERE TREATED WITH REVERENCE AND AWE. THEY WERE ALSO SUPPOSED TO HAVE THE POWER TO STRIKE DEAD ANYONE WHO OFFENDED THEM.

NEVER CARRY A SHOVEL THROUGH THE HOUSE OR YOUR GRAVE WILL BE DUG WITH IT.

A BRIDE WHO STUMBLES AT HER HUSBAND'S DOOR WILL HAVE A SHORT WEDDED LIFE.
